

Patient presents with stable angina pectoris, characterized by chest discomfort during exertion. An electrocardiogram (ECG) shows signs of myocardial ischemia. Initial management includes sublingual nitroglycerin and beta-blockers to reduce myocardial oxygen demand. A follow-up stress test is scheduled to assess the extent of coronary artery disease.